

Idea for answering questions - perspective of each culture is colour-coded. Cultures (to be) covered:

- Goblins
 - Kehts
 - Erds
 - Saphtri
 - Pahtri
 - Voitri
 - Kaerians / nomaths
 - Jitadians
 - Baedoorians
 - Agoians
 - Latoka
 - Vindeans
-

1. What is an average meal in each of your cultures like? How about an expensive, or cheap meal?
2. What methods of preservation and cooking are most common, and how does this shape cuisine?
3. Are there any prohibitions against certain foods/substances?
4. What are common taboos?
5. What are common life milestones? Any rituals/traditions?
6. How are gender roles and sex viewed? Do people transgress or cross between these roles? Are there any other castes or roles one can be "born into"?
7. How is congenital disease viewed?
8. What is the concept of "justice"?
9. What known historical revolts or periods of civil unrest have occurred within history? What factions or ideologies led them?
10. What are the leading political ideologies today?
11. What are their goals? Who or what do they view as enemies to these goals?
12. What materials are most common in crafts?
 - a. Wood, bone, leather and easily accessible fabrics are primary materials - metal is expensive due to iron tools and weapons being crafted only by a few skilled goblins.
13. What materials do they NOT have access to?
14. What kind of things would be desired through trade?
15. What language do people speak? Are there ritual or religious dialects, pidgins, or jargons? How has what people speak evolved, and through what social mechanisms?
16. Is there common literacy? Through what mechanism is it taught? How common are books?
 - a. As goblins do not use written language per se, the foreign literacy is absolutely minimal - most goblins can't read books and this skill is usually held only by technicians. That said, goblins are heavily experienced with their art - which, to some extent, could be seen as written language due to high abstractive form. Participation in art is learnt from infancy and encouraged, making goblins learn new verbal concepts at the same time as they learn how to visualise them.

17. Is there common education? Through what mechanism? What things are prioritized in education, and how is it handled overall?

- a. Education is a process every child goes through ever since it learns the most basic skills to leave its home. That said, goblins' understanding of education is rather practical and focused on learning survival and societal skills. Goblins learn how to create tools, gather resources and food, mediate, take care of each other and fight. Schooling is meant to leave goblins as universally skilled and able to take a variety of work depending on the tribe's needs.

Past basic schooling period, goblins can apprentice to learn more specific skills. The learning process never really ends and even the oldest goblins find some sense of pride and happiness to expand their skillset.

18. What holidays/celebrations are there? Any especially peculiar traditions?

19. What is the role of family? What does "family" mean? What is a "typical" family?

- a. The family is not particularly a concept goblins recognise, they do however understand the idea of partnership - goblins connect with each other romantically, with the caveat that this is not seen as anything particularly sacred or having specific goal (e.g. reproduction). It is somewhat of an informal bond between partners, focused on helping each other and spending time together, in more or less intimate ways. Children are specifically not a part of family per se, as they are considered as part of the tribe.

20. How is sex and reproduction viewed?

- a. There are two ideas about sex, which depend on intention. Romantic sex is seen as one of the ways of intimacy, but also a form of relaxation. It does not bring as much emotional burden as in many other cultures/religions, but it is also personal and holds importance. Reproductive sex is utilitarian, detached from the idea of love/partnership - which is why goblin families that can't have children with each other, search for a mating partner outside. This is not seen as anything wrong, although is not particularly common. Children are also not understood as particularly bound to mating partners, but are taken by the tribe and rise alongside other children very early.

21. What does a typical dwelling look like? How about a poor, or rich one?

22. Are there any important cultural or social movements occurring? What are their goals?

23. What do people do for fun? What sports/games do they play?

24. What do children do? How are children viewed?

- a. Goblin children are heavily education-driven, albeit just like adults, they do spend a lot of time on joys as well. Youngest goblins learn basic skills in a special schooling area, which are usually practical tasks such as making tools, wear, food and so on. The process is often intertwined with them playing various games with each other, running and doing other random joyful activities.

As children get older, they are expected to be more helpful to older goblins, which in itself is seen as an educational task on its own. It is in that time when goblins can learn to become one of the skilled ones - many approach terminating smithing, being technician or linguist, providing the tribe a continuity for skills important for its long-term survival.

25. What does society view its own role as being? What is the purpose of society within this society?
26. What are some limitations the environment places on its inhabitants?
27. What was the earliest known common ancestral nation before the modern cultures diverged? For what reason did they diverge?
28. Who would qualify as a "Culture Hero", and what did they do to deserve this?
29. What significant wars have been fought in history? What are their lasting effects?
30. What significant social movements have occurred within history? What are their effects?
31. What does daily religious practice look like?
32. To what degree does cultural chauvinism exist? Who are the worst perpetrators? Who are the least chauvinistic?
33. If you asked a person on the street, what might they say are the most pressing issues of the time? What may be leading them to believe this?
34. Who are some figures/people that anyone raised in this culture would know about?
35. What kind of music do people play? Where do you see music being performed?
36. How does the average person get their daily nourishment?
 - a. Goblins have a special area in where their tribe lives that is dedicated to daily food rations. Since tribes are rather small, the cook knows who they served today, and it's their responsibility to not let anyone cheat the system.

Food resources are maintained by hunters, fruit gatherers and other goblins that are meant to get food and bring it to the tribe. Their efficiency is seen as highly valued, which is a way for the food gatherers to not be tempted to consume outside of the tribe system - the less they bring, the less of a respect they will get. It is also a sort of competitive sport this way, with goblins challenging themselves or trying to win a favour of goblins they feel attracted to.
37. How is healthcare handled?
38. What would an "atheist" look like, and how would they be handled?
39. What subcultures exist? What are they trying to subvert, and how is this viewed?
40. What conspiracy theories do kooks believe in? Which ones may be true?
41. What does the criminal underworld look like? What kind of things or activities do they trade in (likely tied to taboos/prohibitions)?
42. Who are the most important or influential people or figures that the average person would NOT know about?
43. How is hierarchy viewed? How is it implemented?

44. What are the largest settlements? How much does life differ between in a large settlement, to in a small one?
45. How much does daily life differ between cultures, and in what significant ways?
46. What is the view of the afterlife, if any? How does this differ between cultures?
47. What is seen as the purpose of life? What is the reason for existence?
48. What is the most common origin myth? Who holds this as true? Are there competing theories?
49. What are the typical hygienic practices? What about practices for spiritual hygiene?
50. Are body modifications practiced/ritualized? If so, what are they?
51. What significant ways have people modified their environment?
52. Are there any especially feared monsters in folklore?
53. What are some significant, no longer extant progenitor cultures?
54. What makes up the physical world?
55. What are some plants that have a significant impact on culture due to their unique, useful qualities?
56. What are some animals that have had a significant impact due to being particularly fierce or dangerous?
57. What are some animals that are admired for their native attributes/qualities or beauty?
58. What are some common pests or vermin?
59. What are common wild prey species?
60. Do people keep pets? What kind?
61. How are social deviants punished?
62. How are blind, deaf, or amputee people viewed? How common is it for them to receive accommodations?
63. What atrocities have happened in history?
64. What miracles have happened in history?
65. Is there a personification of Death? What is it like?
66. To what degree do magic, or supernatural events exist? To what degree do people believe in them? How far does the line stretch between supernatural and preternatural?
67. What candies, sodas, and sweet indulgences exist? What is considered an indulgence vs a regular food? What alcoholic drinks/drugs exist? How common are these, and how are they viewed?
68. How common are alternative diets such as veganism? Is this even something on peoples' radar?
69. In what ways have people artificially modified themselves to accomplish what mere tools cannot?