

- if you think of things, they start to exist (as parallel worlds)
- they don't need to be worlds or fantasy, you can make parallel worlds to the one you exist in
- alternative take to "atomised branching": worlds branch out not with every atom taking two superpositions, but if being analyses alternatives
 - aka: if you (technically) can think of 3 ways of solving something, and think of all options, you branch world out into 3 ways; if you thought of 2 ways and third didn't come to your mind, it branches out only on two; etc.

See how Caine can travel the multiverse through dreams?
 I basically got that power for real
 I was here dreaming as normal
 And after running from some weird area I come across an underground civilization that apparently keeps nightmares trapped in magical mirrors
 And in that city there is a tavern
 So I go in
 And here, performing, is one of my dnd characters (he's a bard)
 And he offers to teach me a spell
 Spells in my dreams are like special words/short sentences that I unlocked and can then keep using in future dreams
 Even without being lucid
 The two I had prior to that are shiden, which makes me invisible, and tri si shita tri, which makes me fly
 And there I learnt one called suss (pronounced soos)
 I woke up directly after so he couldn't explain what it did
 I go about my day like usual, very curious to use the thing once night comes
 And then I go to sleep, and begin dreaming again
 The dream goes on, and at the end of it I'm being attacked by some sort of kraken
 So out of idk what to do I remember I have a new mystery spell and proceed to cast suss
 The dream visibly shatters like glass and I wake up, very confused
 Next day, next night, next dreams
 Things go south again, I suss, the world shatters, but this time I end up in some sort of limbo
 I become lucid and just stay there for a little while like wth is happening
 And then a whole new dream starts, but I kept all my memories of the previous one
 (that usually never happens, I basically get reset between each dream)

Lyof HYTL 21:54

Next day, next night, next dreams
 This time I attempt to control the thing
 Well turns out suss apparently lets me change dreams
 And I can choose the new one
 I spent the whole night sussing at random universes I could think of
 And sussed my brother to Baedoor but he didn't remember his dreams this day so I have no idea of knowing if it worked
 I don't exactly control where I end up, typically sussing to Nisvald led me to a world where it was always night indeed but I was basically forcing it by hand
 So it's currently more of a shallow copy
 But I have the spell unlocked for any dream as long as I can think of using it
 And I discovered like two days ago that I can open some sort of menu to choose a world I already went to
 And yes for this it does be the exact same one
 Exactly where I left it
 Meaning I actually had a dream that spanned two irl days
 Because I could go back to my dream from the day before

Thread:

<https://discord.com/channels/842338281692725268/1274650461131243630/1485042833445355682>